

30 June 2021 4.18pm

All student email from Tom Steer, Chief Academic Services Officer

Dear students

You may be aware of the South Australian Premier's press conference held earlier this morning about the management of COVID19 transmission in South Australia which confirmed that there are no new health directives in place beyond those introduced on Monday of this week.

The University continues to implement strict adherence to all applicable directives, to established social distancing protocols, and education remains an essential service.

As always, anyone who is feeling unwell is advised to absent themselves from the University until recovered, and, where appropriate, seek testing and/or medical care.

All the latest information on how the University is managing operations during the pandemic, including FAQs, is available here.

No 'study from home' directive is in effect at this time. However, should the situation evolve further or warrant further change, we will provide additional instruction and information – in the interim, we remain in the usual mode of delivery of education and research.

Regards